BRAUNSCHWEIG.
See BRUNSWICK.

BREMEN is situated about 50 miles from the mouth of the Weser, and ranks in point of commerce next to Hamburg. Population, 252,867 (December 1st, 1912).

A new port has been recently constructed, comprising five large basins from 370 to 1,200 yards in length, and separated from the Weser by a sluice in order to make the harbour independent of the tide.

A large proportion of the trade carried on by the shipping belonging to this port is in the hands of the well-known steamship company the North German Lloyd, which owns a large fleet of steamers employed in running between Bremerhaven and North and South America, China, Japan and Australia, as also to London and Hull.

Bremerhaven and Bremen are free ports.

The following table shows the Imports and Exports of Bremen by sea during 1912:—

Articles.	Imports. Value. £	Exports. Value. £
Foodstuffs	17,313,193	7,292,767
Building materials and fuel	456,194	809,164

COLOGNE (KÖLN), on the Rhine, is the most important industrial and commercial centre on the Rhine, with a population of 620,701 (May, 1911). Cologne is an important centre of railways, especially of those connecting North Germany with France, Belgium and Holland. Its principal manufactures are Eau de Cologne, engines, gunpowder and chemicals, and wine is largely exported. Cologne is in regular steamship communication with the Upper Rhine to Mannheim, Rotterdam, Antwerp and London, and has a large new harbour, with magnificent warehouses. The principal suburbs of Cologne are Nippes, Ehrenfeld, Lindenthal, Deutz, Bayenthal and Sülz. Mülheim-on-the-Rhine and Kalk are situated close to the town on the opposite bank of the Rhine. Here is a Chamber of Commerce.

DANZIG is situated on the Mottlau, a tributary of the Vistula, about 3½ miles from the Baltic. The population of the town Dec. 1st, 1910, was 169,306. The harbour admits vessels drawing 21 feet; there is good anchorage in the roads for those of any burthen. Large vessels load and discharge at Neufahrwasser—the entrance to the port of Danzig, which was opened in April, 1900, as a duty-free inclosure. Vessels drawing 13 feet can proceed up to the town, and can load and discharge alongside the quays.

The bulk of the imports are in transit to Poland, and consequently afford no reliable guide as to the actual trade with the port.

The principal articles of import to Danzig are:—Coffee, rice, spice, fruit, lard, wine, herrings, salt, petroleum, raw iron, chemicals, resin, hides, cement, stone, earthenware, coal and coke.

The principal articles of export from Danzig are: — Grain and seeds, flour, bran, rapeseed oil, oil cake, spirits, sugar, molasses and wood.

There are sugar refineries, liqueur distillers, soap and tobacco manufacturers and ship building yards. The working of amber is carried on here to some considerable extent. There is also a government small arms factory here.

EMDEN (HANOVER), 40 miles S.W of Wilhelmshaven; population (1912) 25,446; on the railway Emden-Soest at the mouth of the Ems, is a commodious harbour with a depth admitting vessels up to a draught of 10 and 11 meters, and the reloading harbour for the canal from Dortmund to the river Ems. Great efforts are being made to raise the importance of this port, with a view of drawing all the shipping for the west of Germany, the large majority of which has hitherto gone over to Rotterdam or Antwerp.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN has a population of 420,000 inhabitants (1911). It is a commercial centre and a banking place of the highest importance. Frankfort does a large commerce in cloth, stuffs, leather, beer, wines, jewellery, printing ink, american cloth, chemical produce, perfumery, machines, sausages, and has also tobacco manufactories and type foundries. The country produces fruits, vegetables, corn &c. It is the centre of several railways, and one of the richest towns on the Continent. The port has been considerably enlarged and is accessible to the biggest Rhine boats. Here is a Chamber of Commerce. Near Frankfort is Homburg vor der Höhe, and Nauheim, favourite summer residences of a large number of foreign visitors.

HAMBORN.

See DUISBURG-RUHRORT.

HAMBURG is a free city, and the largest of the three Hanseatic towns, a great commercial centre, and the second port of Europe, with a population of 986,894 (Nov. 1, 1912). It is situate 57 nautical miles from the mouth of the Elbe, on the right or north bank of the river.

A limited free port is reserved to Hamburg, with extensive bonded warehouses.

Hamburg possesses three floating docks, into the largest of which vessels of a maximum tonnage of 35,000 can be received. This dock has a length of 240 yards, a maximum breadth of 36 yards, and can be used by vessels whose draught does not exceed 33 feet.

The following table will show the remarkable development of Hamburg as a shipping port, viz. :—

Year.	Entered. Number of Vessels.	Registered Tonnage.

HOF (UPPER FRANCONIA), 32 miles N.E. of Bayreuth, is a manufacturing town in Bavaria, with a population of (1910) 41,126 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Saale, and is a station on the Bavarian and Saxony railways. Hof possesses a large number of factories engaged in the manufacture of cotton, hosiery, woollen goods, cloth and felt. It is also a very important transit place for goods coming from or going to Bavaria and South Germany on one part, and Saxony and North Germany on the other side. Here is a Chamber of Commerce.
